First early potatoes mature in 60–110 days. Planted towards the end of March, they are ready for lifting from late June or early July. Potatoes can be planted from mid-March onwards as a rough guide dependent on weather.

Compared to maincrop potatoes, first and second earlies are lower yielding, usually have smaller tubers, need less space and escape some of the diseases, such as blight. First and second earlies are generally eaten as soon as harvested – enjoyed as ‘new potatoes’ – while maincrop cultivars can either be used fresh from the ground or stored for winter use in net bags.

Second early potatoes mature in 110–120 days. Planted mid- to late April, they will be ready for harvesting from early to mid-August. Potatoes can be planted from mid-March onwards as a rough guide dependent on weather.

Maincrop potatoes mature in 125–140 days and if planted in late April can be harvested by mid-August, and this can be continued through to October. Potatoes can be planted from mid-March onwards as a rough guide dependent on weather.

Maincrop potatoes are higher yielding than first and second earlies, and usually have larger tubers. Maincrop cultivars can either be used fresh from the ground or stored for winter use.
